

A GREAT RISE IN RAW SILKS.

Excited State of the European Markets.

Among the recent arrivals from Europe, returning after nearly eight years residence in France to settle and resume the practice of law in this, his native city, is ex-Consul Peixotto, of Lyons, who is recognized both abroad and at home as an authority in silk. The recent rise in silk in Europe, which has not only affected foreign but American markets, which imports from eleven to twelve million dollars annually of this material for home manufacture, naturally creates great interest among American manufacturers, the total production of all kinds of silk goods in the United States now reaching over forty millions of dollars annually. A Tribune reporter called on Mr. Peixotto at his office, No. 39 Broadway, and from an interview gathered the following facts: The advance in raw silks began in the first week in November. An Italian syndicate was formed with a reported capital of 20,000,000 francs, and succeeded without difficulty in obtaining control of the principal markets. Milan, Turin, Bergamo, Venice, Messina, Florence, Verona in Italy, Lyons, Marseilles, St. Etienne in France, Crefeld and Elberfeld in Germany, Moscow in Russia, Basle and Zurich in Switzerland, in fact all the principal and secondary silk centers participated in the movement. Prices of all grades of silk advanced from 2 to 5 francs the kilo and finer qualities to 6 and 8 francs. The rise has continued in spite of the desperate resistance of manufacturers, particularly those of Lyons, the greatest silk emporium of the world, where it is asserted no money has been made in the production of silk fabrics for more than five years. This opposition, however, had little effect, though supported by the stubborn fact of long continued depression, not to say demoralization, in the business of silk goods. Having a solid and legitimate basis, the rise in prices continued and is still going on, and is likely to increase as the orders for the trade of the new year come pouring in, as pour in they are likely to do, that capricious goddess Fashion having at length once again pronounced in favor of pure silk goods, after several years of coquetting with wool, cotton and other materials as principal auxiliaries. The famous dressmakers of Paris have issued their decrees, and the principal fashion journals, both in Paris and London, confirm the ukase in favor of this material.

"The fact is," said the ex-consul, "never in history had silk fallen so low as before this present rise. In 1868 the best qualities of French organzine silk sold for 150 to 160 francs the kilo; in 1876 the minimum price was 75 to 80 francs; at the commencement of the present year prices had fallen to 53 francs. China silks, which commanded 81 francs in 1868, had fallen to 34 and 36 francs this year. Italian and all other sorts had suffered a similar disastrous decline. The European silk industry was reduced to starvation prices. Hundreds of thousands of growers and weavers were compelled to seek other occupations. Millions of mulberry trees were uprooted and other and more profitable agricultural products planted. There was a decrease in the production of crops in China as well as in Europe, while such countries as France and Spain, whose silks were esteemed the best as to quality, declined both in quality and quantity. This year's crop in France, which formerly produced upward of two million kilos, fell off to less than 600,000 kilos. In Spain the crop fell short 25 to 30 per cent, in Italy from 15 to 20 per cent, while China has had for export for several years past scarcely more than 55,000 to 60,000 bales.

"Business in silk goods for several years has hardly paid more than investments in United States bonds. Depression in the silk trade, except for certain novelties of extremely limited production, has universally prevailed.

"Notwithstanding all this, so varied and diversified have been the uses to which silk has been adapted that the consumption all along has equalled the production. Some few leading fabrics have from time to time yielded handsome profits, but in comparatively insignificant amount. Reeling and throwing mills in France, Italy and Spain were abandoned by the hundreds. The wretched raiser of silk fell a prey to the capitalist and was either driven to ruin outright or to mortgages. Half the properties in France, and perhaps as many in Italy, are under mortgage to-day, while thousands are closed and utterly crumbling to pieces.

"In face of this condition of things, viewing the actual state of stocks on hand, the fact of manufacturers being all but denuded of supplies, having bought only from hand to mouth for several years past, where formerly they carried large quantities, the powerful syndicate above alluded to organized its campaign and has until now successfully prosecuted its work. I consider this work to be legitimate, having for its object the permanent revival of the silk industry, as well as for the immediate promoters. Silk has advanced in the past two months from 10 to 20 per cent; taking all sorts, the average had been fully 15 per cent. It is destined to go higher. The demand for pure silk tissues has partially revived; it will positively continue. Pure black silk goods will again become as popular as they were in the good old time when our mothers never considered themselves dressed without a black silk gown, the most elegant garment a woman can wear."—New York Tribune.

Settling a Minister.
Charles H. was one of the most hardily treated exiles of all the princes that striven for a crown. The Scotchmen led him a sorry life of it when they were taking care of him awhile in 1651. On one occasion, when he was canvassing the Scotch Presbyterians for their vote and interest, he called, among other places, at Rev. Mr. Guthrie's manse of Stirling. As he entered the room, the mistress rose to offer him a chair, but her husband exclaimed: "Stop, my dear! The king is a young man; he can get a chair for himself." Charles concealed his anger until he came into his inheritance, when he hanged the Rev. Mr. Guthrie.—Ingleside.

A Western Ghost Story.

The following strange story comes from the city of Burlington, Iowa, and is vouched for by responsible parties. There lives a few miles out from Burlington, in one of the suburban towns, a merchant called Jones, who every few months goes into the city to replenish his stock of goods. Last May he went to Burlington for that purpose, and arriving late in the afternoon went direct to the hotel he was in the habit of stopping at and registered. He told the clerk that he wanted his old room, No. 34, and to have it all ready, as he would not be in until late, for he expected to visit the different stores, select his goods, and finish up so as to take the morning train. The clerk told him he could have the room, but would have to be in until late, for he expected to visit the different stores, select his goods, and finish up so as to take the morning train. The clerk told him he could have the room, but would have to be in until late, for he expected to visit the different stores, select his goods, and finish up so as to take the morning train.

Jones says it got so amusing that he poked his bedfellow in the ribs to awaken him that he might enjoy the fun, thinking it would be as amusing to a preacher as to any other mortal. The preacher showed no signs of awakening, and the love-making went on stronger than ever. He punched again and again, but failed to awaken his friend. At last the pair got so far along that Jones could stand it no longer, and, after giving the preacher a good kick in the side, raised up and pulled the sheet down off of his face so he could see. As he pulled the sheet down his hair stood on end and his face blanched with horror, for there beside him lay the corpse of a beautiful woman with dark hair and wrapped in a shroud, and a silver dollar on each of her eyes.

When he recovered from the first shock he sprang from the bed, and as he landed on the floor, his face as white as the dead body in the bed and his hair on end, the young man went out of the window, taking the glass and sash with him; the woman, with a shriek, fell fainting to the floor. Jones grabbed the chair on which were his clothes and started out. As he opened the door he saw his mistake, as the number was 24 instead of 34. A few steps took him to 34, and, entering, he made sure his bedfellow this time was alive. He didn't sleep, and rose early and went down to breakfast. Here, in the dining-room, the whole conversation was about the mysterious action of the corpse. Some who entered a few minutes after declared the body had never moved or been moved, as the dollars were still on her eyes. Others thought the pair had fallen asleep and the man had a dream of a ghost, and, rushing through the window, had frightened the lady. Jones never said a word, and this is the first time it has ever been told, and no doubt the mystery will now be cleared up.

It appears that the body of the dead lady had been placed in No. 24, and the young man and lady were sitting up with it. At 12 o'clock midnight, as is the custom out West, the watchers went down to the dining-room for a lunch, which had been spread for them, and during their absence Jones, in his hurry, had entered room 24 instead of 34, and had undressed and got in bed before their return. Whether the woman who was one of the watchers ever married the man, who had hardly finished his declaration of being ready to die for her, etc., before he left her, at the sight of what he supposed to be the dead woman rising, is not known.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Unnecessary Work.

A lady who is convinced that at least one quarter of the work done by women is unnecessary, says the world would go on quite as well without it. She likens it to an ottoman-cover she once saw a lady work.

She was all bent up, and was putting her eyes out counting stitches. "I don't get any time for reading," she said, plaintively, as she picked up some beads on a needle. "You must have a great deal of leisure."

And yet she had spent more time embroidering a ridiculous dog on a piece of broadcloth than would have sufficed to read twenty good books. It did not have the poor merit of being economical, for the price of the materials would have bought enough handsome damask for two covers.

A friend of mine tells of seeing a squaw seat herself by the town pump, roll a bundle of calico, cut out a dress, make it, put it on and walk off, all in about two hours. I have always regretted that he did not continue the story by telling me that the squaw spent her abundant leisure beautifully.

I would not have women reduce their sewing to quit so simple a performance but a good deal would be gained if they thought more about living and less about their accidents.—Youth's Companion.

In Every Body Lurks!

Among the many stories Lincoln used to relate was the following: Trudging along a lonely road one morning on my way to the county seat, Judge ——— overtook me with his wagon and invited me to a seat. He had not gone far before the wagon began to wobble. Said I, "Judge, I think your coachman has taken a drop too much."

Putting his head out of the window, the judge shouted: "Why, you infernal scoundrel, you are drunk!"

Turning round with great gravity, the coachman said: "Be dad! but that's the first 'rightful' s'cision your Honor's giv'n 'n twel' mont'!"

If people knew the facts they would be surprised to learn how many people reel in the streets who never "drink a drop." They are the victims of sleeplessness, of growdy days, of apoplectic tendencies, whose blood is set on fire by uric acid. Some day they will reel no more—they will drop dead, just because they haven't the moral courage to defy useless professional attendance, and by use of the wonderful Warner's safe cure neutralize the uric acid in the system and thus get rid of the "drunkenness in the blood."—The American Rural Home.

Storm Signals.

As the coming of a great storm is heralded by the display of cautionary signals, so is the approach of that dread and fatal disease, Consumption of the Lungs, usually announced in advance by pimples, blotches, eruptions, ulcers, glandular swellings, and kindred outward manifestations of the internal blood poison, which, if not promptly expelled from the system, attacks the delicate tissues of the lungs, causing them to ulcerate and break down. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is the great remedy for this, as for all diseases having their origin in bad blood. It improves the appetite and digestion, increases nutrition and builds up the wasted system.
